Michigan League for Public Policy

Board of Directors Statement on Right-to-Work Legislation

After a decade of economic hardship, Michigan families need their leaders to pull together to restore good jobs and create even stronger management-union collaboration.

Job providers and labor unions have had a long history in Michigan of working together at the negotiating table and forging agreements that are good for all involved. Right to Work legislation is an extremely divisive issue and harmful to the positive spirit needed to grow Michigan's middle class, lift up struggling working households and make Michigan a place of economic opportunity and hope. As we work to rebuild our economy, job providers and workers need stability more than ever.

A debate on Right to Work at this time only serves to be counterproductive to the League's mission of ensuring economic security for all Michigianians.
